Chris Ryan, Trevor's Son-In-Law posted these words on Facebook February 2018:

This is Trevor Dunn. Trevor passed away today. For the last 15 years or so I have had the privilege of knowing Trevor and referring to him as my father in law. Trevor was a husband, father, friend and generally beautiful person. His peaceful departure leaves a void.

Trevor was a man of impeccable character, exceptionally well read and a man of catholic interests. These qualities set him up as a great conversationalist. He was the kind of guy who would sit in on ICAC or public planning hearings for entertainment value. He was a keen historian, gardener, walker and observer of current affairs (note the s). He loved dogs (even showed them years ago). He loved wine and cheese (his blood type was part Shiraz, part Penicillium camemberti). He was a dedicated vegetarian for many years.

With his first wife Heather he raised 4 intelligent, caring and productive children. One of these children I had the privilege of marrying and without question is the most outstanding person I have yet met. With his second wife Katherine he ran a law practice and raised three more children with outstanding qualities. Trevor gained the deep respect and affection of all of them.

I really didn't get to know my own father but if EHarmony/Matchmaker had a father matching service I expect that Trevor would have made my shortlist.

A dignified man (except perhaps when remonstrating with a vendor about the consistency of chocolate in a paddle pops just purchased), caring and thoughtful, a man of calm temperament but not without passion. I am blessed that my own children had an opportunity to be around him and get to know him. Trevor disclosed once that he saw a lot of himself in my son Reuben- to me that is a compliment of the highest order.

Trevor practiced as a solicitor for more than 40 years and was a true professional in the proper sense of the word. The professional as it was originally constituted possessed characteristics of integrity, accountability, objectivity, was a fiduciary and recognised an element of service to society.

Whenever I encountered members of the legal profession in Newcastle and dropped his name, without exception, they made reference to the high regard in which they held him.

I didn't intersect with Trevor much professionally. He once cut in on me at the bar table in a mention list using the seniority rule (the only solicitor in my career to ever do so, because no-one expects to observe it these days. It was done with such panache that Trevor seemed oblivious - the only pertinent fact to him that he was the most senior practitioner at the bar table, by far, and obviously he should rise first). I certainly valued the opinion of Trevor and his wife Kath as two outstanding lawyers bending their ear over legal principles from time to time.

Trevor's life is worthy of celebration. If you knew Trevor, little of what I have written will surprise you. If you didn't know him, the details don't matter. I encourage you to celebrate men and women who have lived a life and raised a family (or two) and maybe show some appreciation for those people if you can. I have heard it said that there are 3 important questions for us to consider:

Did I live? Did I love? Did I matter?

There is ample evidence that Trevor lived, her certainly loved and there is no doubt he mattered.
